

By Rich Hoyer

Birds and Native Plant Relationships

*Monoptilon
bellioides*, Mojave
Desertstar

Saxifraga
eriophora,
Redfuzz Saxifrage

Carnegiea gigantea ,
Saguaro

Gilded Flicker

Gila Woodpecker

Brown-crested Flycatcher

Elf Owl

White-winged Dove

Cylindropuntia fulgida, Chainfruit Cholla

Curve-billed Thrasher

Cactus Wren

Celtis reticulata, Netleaf Hackberry

Northern Cardinal

Pyrrhuloxia

Crissal Thrasher

Crissal Thrasher

Ash-throated Flycatcher

Nutting's Flycatcher

Rufous-backed Robin

Prosopis velutina, Velvet Mesquite

Bell's Vireo

A photograph of a Wilson's Warbler perched on a thin, light-colored branch. The bird is bright yellow with a black cap and a black eye. It is facing left. The background is a blurred forest scene with green leaves and brown branches. A large, dried, brown leaf is visible behind the bird.

Wilson's Warbler

Bewick's Wren

Ladder-backed Woodpecker

Phoradendron californicum, Mesquite
Mistletoe

Phainopepla

Rhus virens , Evergreen Sumac

Hermit Thrush

Elegant Trogon

Dodonaea viscosa, Hopbush

Aloysia wrightii, Oreganillo

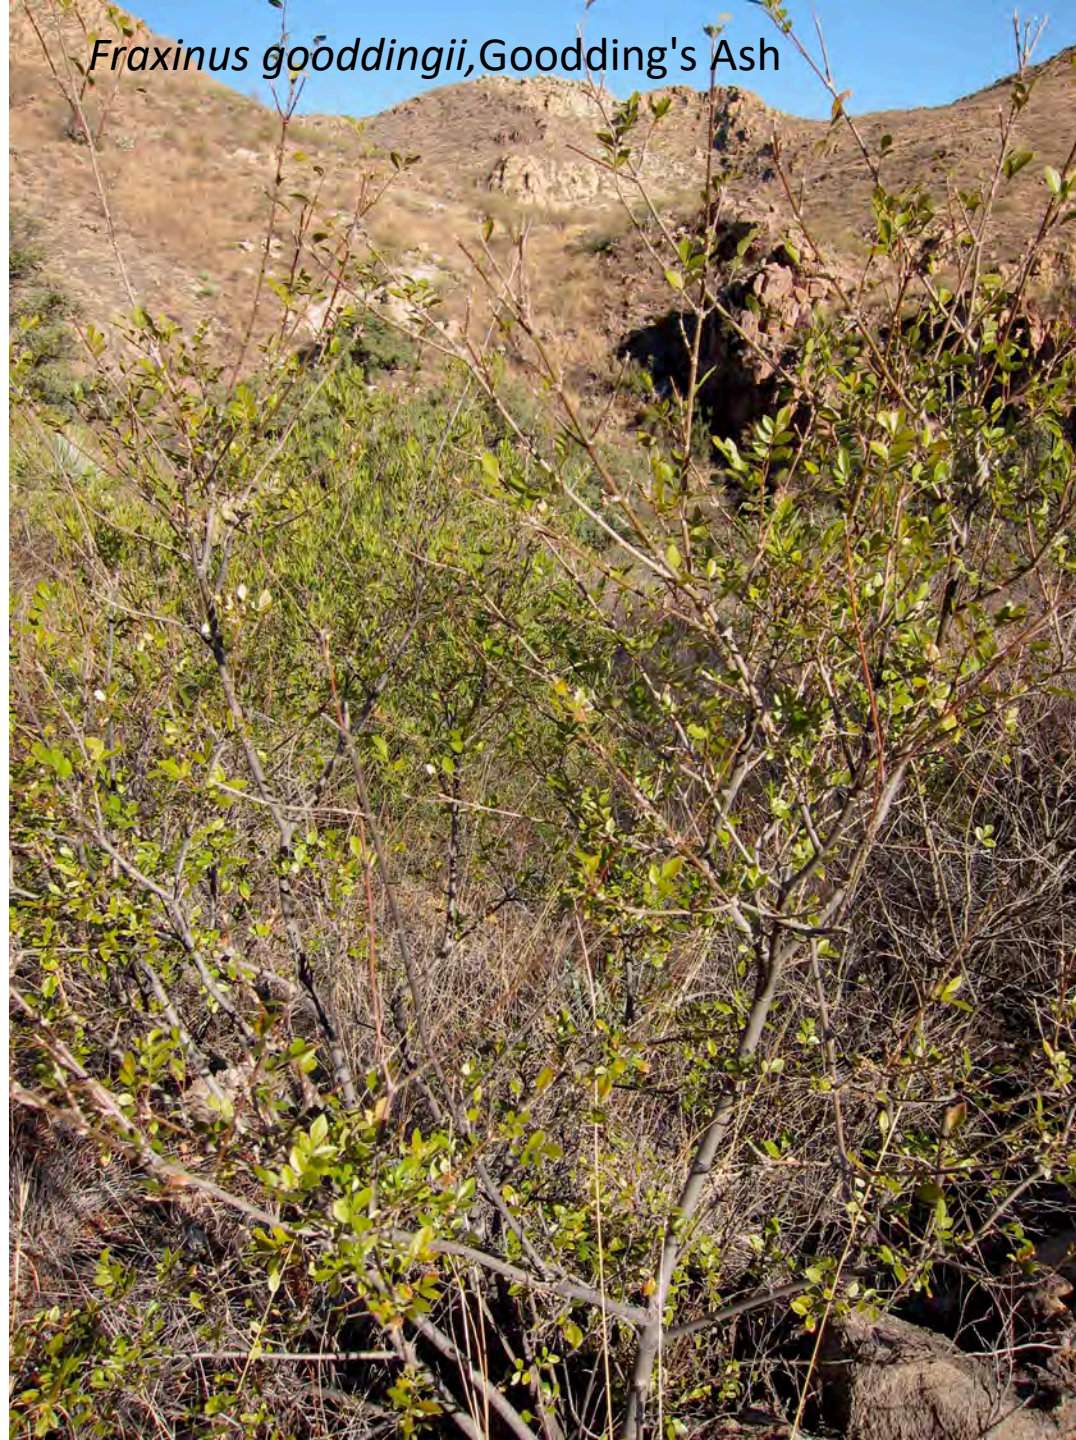

Eysenhardtia orthocarpa,
Kidneywood

Fraxinus gooddingii, Goodding's Ash

Lagascea decipiens, Doll's Head

Rufous-capped Warbler

Black-capped Gnatcatcher

Five-striped Sparrow

Five-striped Sparrow

Favorite Resources:

Desert Survivors Nursery, Tucson Arizona

SEINet data portal:

<https://swbiodiversity.org/seinet/index.php>

Plantsoftheworldonline.org

iNaturalist.org

The End